TO THE RIGHT HONOVRABLE SIR THOMAS COVENTRY KNIGHT,

Baron Coventry of Alsborough, Lord Keeper of the Great Seale of ENGLAND, Grace and Peace bee multiplied.

RIGHT HONOVRABLE,

ALthough neither my perſon nor condition can any way merit ought at your Lordſhips hands, yet the benigne aſpect which your Honour hath been alwayes obſerved to afford vnto the Labours of ſuch as have deſired to doe but the leaſt good ſervice in Gods Church, hath thus farre emboldened mee, in all humilitie to crave, that theſe my Endeavours may paſſe into the publique view vnder your Lordſhips Name: which favour being happily obtained, the Worke it ſelfe may of all ſorts expect to bee the rather embraced; and my inſtant requeſts ſhall not ceaſe to be preſented before the Throne of Gods Grace, that the Spirit of Wiſedome and Underſtanding may reſt vpon you, and ſo direct your Honour in all your graue and great Employments for the Common good, that in the end he may graciouſly bring you, as a ſhocke of Corne, in a good old Age to his everlaſting Kingdome, by Chriſt Ieſus.

Your Honours

An Advertiſement to the Chriſtian Reader, concerning the occaſion of compoſing and publiſhing this Concordance, together with the manifold uſe thereof.

SVch is the excellency of Scripture-learning, in which conſiſteth the ſoule of true Divinity, that we may ſay of it, as the [a] Philoſopher ſpake concerning the knowledge of the ſoule of man: A ſmall and dimme knowledge of it is to bee valued farre above a greater meaſure of clearer inſight in any other ſcience. For the inſpired Oracles of God containe in them the infallible rule of faith, the unmoveable ground of hope, the perfect guide of life, the ſacred fewell of devotion, the divine ſubject of contemplation, the everlaſting ſpring of celeſtiall conſolation. The Canonicall bookes of the Old and New Teſtament are exact Mappes of the heauenly Canaan, drawne by the penſill of the Holy Ghoſt, the authenticall Records of the Church, the Deedes of Almighty God, and Euidences of mans ſalvation. In the peruſall whereof they who take not exceeding great delight and comfort (it is to bee feared) are either wholly earthly, and minde not heaven: or haue little aſſurance of any divine Legacy bequeathed to themſelves there. But the children of promiſe, who will not forgoe their hope of heaven for all that the earth can afford, are never ſatisfied in reading over and over day and night, the ſeverall Chapters of the holy Bible, which are as ſo many Codicils, by which their Heavenly Father bequeatheth to them much treaſure of grace here, and ſeuerall Crownes of glory in his Kingdome hereafter. In which regard they claime them as their [b] heritage for ever; they eſteeme them [c] above gold, yea much fine gold: and therefore Saint [d] Ierome calleth them a casket of Iewels: Let theſe Iewels, ſaith he, alwayes hang upon thy necke, and at thine eares. They are alſo ſweeter to their taſte than the honie and the honie combe; and therefore devout Saint [e] Auſtine termeth them banquetting diſhes, ſaying, Let thy Scriptures be my delicacies, let mee neuer be deceiued in them, nor deceiue by them. With knowledge of theſe alone, wee may, and by ordering our life accordingly ſhall, goe to heaven: but with all other learning wee may, and without this ſhall certainly to Hell. And what will it availe a man to bee excellently learned in all other things, and to be grosly ignorant in that [f] one thing which is necessary? What will it [g] boot a man to be wise to perdition, and to goe to hell by books?

Now if such bee the necessity and excellency of saving knowledge comprised intirely in holy Scriptures, questionlesse of all pious labours wee are most to blesse God for theirs, wherby these writings of God may be made more cleare, easie, ready, and familiar unto us. For the best of all helpes are helpes in the best things.

In which kinde all that are not strangers to sacred studies, accord, that Concordances are of more solidity than lustre; vse, than shew. As [h] the goodly toppes of trees are in the eyes of all, but not the rootes out of which they grow; and the beautifull forefronts of great Pallaces, but not the foundations which support them; and the gorgeous garments of cloth of gold and tissue richly embroydered with variety of workes and flowers, but not the skeines of silke, and gold threed of which yet they are made; So it cannot be denied, but that those exquisit expositions of Scripture, discourses upon Scripture, and deductions from Scripture, which draw all mens eyes unto them with admiration, are not a little indebted for their materials to Concordances, or such like helpes of studies. For though by frequent reading of holy Scriptures a man may imprint in his minde the principall heads of Doctrine, together with the course of History, and most remarkable phrases through the whole Bible: yet who ever charged his memory with every particular passage, every word with the severall repetitions and acceptions thereof [i] in Scripture? whereof notwithstanding our skilfull Bezaleels who deale with the cutting and setting in gold the diamonds of the divine word, make speciall use: as Saint [k] Chrysostome illustrateth it by the example of finers of gold and silver, who meddle not onely with wedges, ingots, and massie peeces of gold, but with the smallest foyle or ray the mettall casteth.

Were that the onely, which is the most usuall employment of a Concordance, to serve as a remembrancer to helpe us out when we sticke at a quotation, and by retaining one word, as it were laying hold on a clod to recover the whole tract or plat of holy ground, the immense labours of the pious compiler of this worke deserved to be thankfully remembred by us, for thus steading our memory: But the use of his worke extendeth not onely to the helping of that faculty. They who exercise their invention in dilating upon any sacred subject, or their judgement in discerning the naturall and proper sense of Scripture, shall finde this booke ready at hand to furnish them with that they desire, eyther for clearing the text in most places, or proofe of any point of Doctrine necessary to salvation. For the severall words and phrases in holy Writ are like those [l] pictures of silver spoken of in the Proverbs, in which apples of gold were inclosed: and consequently the frame of this Concordance exhibiting to our eye all the pictures of silver in their severall places, sheweth us also where we may with ease take out the apples of gold. To explaine this a little to such as are either utterly unacquainted with collections of this nature, or cast an eye of scorne upon them (and yet none make more use in secret of them then they;) if in their reading the Bible they fall upon upon some perplexed sentence and obscure place, let them according to the [m] direction of S. Austin, seek for other parallel texts or places of Scripture, in which the same matter is set down more plainly and evidently. For as the Sun is best descryed by his owne beames, so the Scripture is best expounded by Scripture. But if they cannot meet with any parallel sentence, let them then single out that word or words, the ambiguity wherof causes obscurity in the sentence. This word or words let them search in their Concordance, and observe in each place where they reade it, the severall significations therof, and among them let them make choise of that which upon due examination they finde best agreeth with the analogie of faith, the scope of the place, and circumstances of the text. Againe, if their thoughts fix upon any simple theame (as the Logicians call it) and they desire in their meditation to prosecute it through all the topicks, and in their way knocke at all the doores of arguments, definition, division, parts, causes, effects, subjects, adjuncts, opposites; they shall need but to trace the word with the Synonima's in their Concordance, and they cannot misse of what may be found in Scripture for their purpose. Or if in their method they would handle thema complexum or compositum, (which in the understanding is a composition, but in speech a proposition) let them but resolve the proposition into the simple termes of which it consisteth, and as the Concordance pointeth, turne to those texts in the Bible in which those simplices termini, or equivalent, occurre; so they shall soone gather what the treasury of Gods Word yeeldeth, eyther for the explication, confirmation, or application of that doctrinall principle or conclusion. Thus may they make their Concordance a nursery garden to store them with choise plants and flowers of Paradise, I meane divine allegations. In regard of which profit, or rather necessity of Concordances, we reade that Origen who wrote the first Commentary upon holy Scripture, made also the first Concordance in Greek (though somewhat of another nature, and with much more toyle, because out of manie translations:) Since his time many have assayed a worke semblable thereunto in Latin. But Henr. Stephanus his master-piece, as it were to make good his name, like that Oration of Demosthenes de corona, carrieth away the Garland from them all.

I foresee what ignorance or malevolence may object against this worke: that our presses are overpress with English bookes already, what need we then to put them to more torture, and make them groane under so heavie a bulke as this is in English?

[n] Quis legat hæc? min tu istud ais? nemo, hercule nemo: vel duo vel nemo. For whom is this worke? Scholars can have recourse to Concordances in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin. And the illiterate as little need this work, as they can make use of it. To this objection the diligent Composer hereof might answere as Lucilius in Tully, that [o] he wrote not his bookes for the most learned, or for the most unlearned, but for the middle sort. They were not for the first sort, and the latter were not for them. The former were too sharp sighted, and could spy the smallest errors, the latter were too dull and short sighted, they could not see that which was good in them. That one would not stoup so low, and the other could not reach so high.

But I dare undertake, if they will indifferently and with equity consider of this worke, the Author may deservedly expect thanks of all sorts, and they reape benefit by him. To begin at the lower end: There is none that can reade English, but may helpe himselfe by this Concordance to perfect his learned collections of divine notes, and readily thereby find any place of Scripture whereof he remembreth any word, having forgot the quotation. For example: If he remember that he hath read or heard this phrase in one of the Prophets, He will cast all our sins into the depths of the sea, and desireth to finde it, that he may meditate upon the place for his further comfort; let him take this booke, and search the words Sea, and depths, and sins, and over passing the books of Moses, Chronicles, Psalmes, &c. follow the words in the Prophets, where at Micha. ch. 7. ver. 19. he shall meet with what he seekes for. Likewise if any imperfect or broken passage out of the Evangelists or Apostles run in his mind, let him cull out the principal word which he retaineth in his memory (the other having slipped him) and let him confine his search in the Concordance to the Gospels or Epistles, and with great facility hee will light upon the whole sentence desired by him. By the manifold allegations in the New Testament out of the Old, and declarations of them, and allusions vnto them, he may much confirme his faith in the harmony of Scripture, and consent of the New Testament with the Old. As also by the frequent repetition of the same doctrines, and often inculcating the same duties (sometimes in the same words) in Scripture, he may learne both to bewaile our naturall forgetfulnesse of those things that most concerne us, and take more speciall notice of the most necessary doctrines of faith, and directions for our life.

Now let me ascend higher, and crave leave to informe or remember the learned, that they haue also their share, at least in some part, of the crop of this harvest. For though they be well acquainted with the Concordances and translations in the learned languages, yet their mother tongue, in which they heare the Scriptures perpetually reade both publikely and privately, cannot but be more ready to them, and fresh in their memory. Neither will the Concordances in the learned languages give them that satisfaction they expect; for, as p Reuchlin spake of the languages themselves, The Hebrewes drinke out of springs, the Greekes out of the rivers, and the Latinists of fens: so those which make use of the Hebrew Concordance of the Old Testament, are like those who drinke water out of a most pure fountaine; those which use the Greeke according to the Septuagints translation, or any other, are like those who drinke out of rivers, in some places muddy, in others brackish, yet for the most part not unwholsome: But they who use the Latine vulgar, are like those who drinke out of fens or marshes, in which the water is every where foule, and in many places unwholsome and infectious. And therefore albeit the q Trent Conventicle hath Canonized that translation, and Anathematized all such as upon any pretext whatsoever reject it: yet the learned, even among the Iesuites, in their Commentaries familiarly leave it, though it, though with respective language, and upon false termes.

And as Pope Leo the tenth before that Synod set Arius Montanus on worke to translate the whole Bible a new out of the Hebrew, and allowed Erasmus translation (of the New) often interfering with the vulgar: So Pope Clement the Eighth, since that Councel, made bold to correct the edition of Sixtus his predecessor (on whom the Councell imposed that taske, to revise and set forth the vulgar agreeably to their determination) in more than a thousand places; and yet hee himselfe hath left large gleanings for those that shall follow him in the like animadversions. The truth whereof is so evident and undeniable, that the publisher of the Concordance out of this vulgar translation, Anno 1600. in his Preface, complaineth that he wrote after a bad copy. The f old Interpreter, saith he, seemeth rather to follow the sense than the words, and oftentimes departs from both, as it clearly appeares by comparing it with the Latin translations of Pagnin, Arius Montanus, and other most learned Interpreters, and with the Hebrew and Greeke Originals.

See both the editions, and a book intituled Bellum Papale, by Thomas Iames.

f Praef. 1. Concord. 1600. Vetus interpres sensum potius quàm verba videtur respexisse, imo & à verbis ipsis, & à sensu frequenter discedit, &c.

Neither let any imagine that in thus laying open the nakednesse of this vulgar Latin, I disgrace S. Ierom, whose name this translation beareth; for since his putting forth this version (if ever it were his, and not rather an Olla podrida of many corrupt Latin translations, some made by Catholikes, and some by Heretikes) it hath been so altered almost in every Chapter, that it no more deserveth to be called his, than that famous weather-beaten barke of Athens, to bee called Theseus his ship, which indeed at the first was built by him, but in processe of yeeres was so often repaired and rigged, that it had never a planke of the same remaining which it had at the first.

Navis Thesei.

The innumerable corruptions in this Latin vulgar, additions to the Hebrew, noted in Stephanus his edition, Anno 1532. by Obelisks; and detractions from the Hebrew, noted by Asterisks, were a principall motive to mee to encourage the Author of this Concordance to proceed in perfecting this his worke; that in steade of a Concordance most in use, collected out of a most corrupt translation, wee might by his unwearied paines have a compleat one out of the most pure. To the price whereof they whose ability will not reach, may at a small rate furnish themselves with the abbridgment thereof annexed to the Bible.

Since this worke was taken in hand, I confesse I understood of two other Concordances, the one in English by Mr. Iohn Marbeck, dedicated to King Edward the Sixt, the other in Latin, fitted to Tremelius and Iunius translation but neither gave me full satisfaction. That of Mr. Marbeck is very imperfect, pointing to Chapters, but not to Verses. That out of Tremelius is appropriated to one edition, and cannot be very usefull to those who have not that edition, in regard of the exceeding great variety which may be observed in the severall editions by Iunius, still endeavouring to better his translation. Howsoever, that Concordance is only for those who have attained a good measure of knowledge in the Latin tongue, and that translation is only used by Scholars in their studies; whereas the translation out of which this English is gathered, is publikely reade in Churches, and in all families. And as Iunius his translation had the advantage of all former from whom it borrowed light, ſo this for the ſame reaſon hath the advantage of Iunius his tranſlation, and is undoubtedly the moſt correct tranſlation extant. The Tranſlators were many, and very eminent in their faculty; the time they ſpent in it was much, and their care and diligence extraordinary. To ſpeake nothing of the living, whoſe vertues may be in the [t] eye of envie, and therefore their commendation ſubject to the tongue of detraction: I can upon my owne knowledge teſtifie of the deceaſed Phenix of our Vniverſity and Colledge Doctor Rainolds his induſtry, who followed that pious worke with that intention of ſpirit and vigilance, that hee thereby much impayred his ſtrength, and neere the end of it ended his dayes; and in the tranſlation of the Booke of life, was himſelfe tranſlated to a better life: To which, he who is the way, the truth, and the life, bring all thoſe who love the way of truth in ſincerity.

To the

To the Reader concerning the Benefit of this CONCORDANCE.

Christian Reader,

BLindneſſe of minde is not the leaſt part of miſery that ſin hath brought upon man: which is ſo much the greater, by reaſon of the more than Cymmerian darkeneſſe which hath poſſeſſed the world: ſo as a man, not inlightened, living all his daies in the world, muſt needs, ſome time or other, fall into vter darkeneſſe. Only Gods word is a light to our feet, Pſal. 119. 105. And it hath ſuch a divine efficacie accompanying it, as it inlightneth the eyes, Pſal. 19. 8. Worthy it is therefore ſo to bee reade and ſtudied, as readily on all occaſions the directions and conſolations thereof may eaſily be applyed: which if it were done, ſuch helps as now are neceſſary, would be leſs needfull. Our careleſneſſe is the cauſe of the neceſſity of ſuch helps, as by the Divine indulgency are afforded unto vs. Inſtance Intemperancy, the cauſe of ſo many skilfull Phyſicians: and Injuſtice, the cauſe of ſo many learned Judges and Counſellors. On this ground Plato accounted thoſe places miſerable, where were many Judges and Phyſitians, becauſe he ſuppoſed that there muſt needs be much Injuſtice and Intemperancie. Herein he cenſured, not the means of redreſſe, but the cauſe of the neede of thoſe meanes. Thus may wee lament the cauſes of the great need that there is of ſo many Teachers, many Commentaries, many Common-place-bookes, and many Concordances. Were we as perfect in the holy Scriptures as we ſhould, and might bee by ſtudy and prayer, many helpes that are now of ſingular uſe, would be but as ſtaves to ſteddy and ſtrong men. But the caſe being as it is, and is like to be, ſo long as the world laſteth, very commendable and profitable is the paines that is taken (to omit other helpes) in compoſing Concordances of the Bible. Large Concordances have heretofore been made in the three languages of learning, Hebrew on the Old Teſtament, Greeke on the New, and Latine on both. Becauſe Latine is now the moſt common language throughout Chriſtendome, many, as well Papiſts as Proteſtants (as Hugo Cardinalis, Alberſtadius, Franſe. Lucæ, Relliganus, Bullorus, and others) have laboured in this ſoile. But among others, the Stephens, Robert and Henri, have gone beyond all in skill and paines; inſomuch as their Concordances, eſpecially the laſt of Henry Stephen, juſtly beare this Title, Maximæ & abſolutiſſimæ Concordantiæ, The largeſt and perfecteſt Concordances. Robert Stephen the father moſt diligently ſearched out all the words of holy Scripture in the common Latine tranſlation, and ſet them down in an alphabetical order, more fully than ever before: Henry Stephen the ſon hath accurately diſtinguiſhed words of divers ſignifications, and ſo compoſed them under their diſtinct heads. A great helpe, at leaſt to yong Students in Divinitie. Such hath the profit of Concordances been found to be, as they have beene compoſed in ſundry other languages. There have been many yeeres ſince Engliſh Indexes of proper Hebrew and Greeke Names, with their ſignifications, and Tables of the principall points contained in the Bible, and ſome ſo large, as they carry the title of Concordances, (amongſt which, the briefe Concordance lately collected by Mr. Iohn Downham, Batchelor in Divinity, and allowed by Authority to be bound with the Bible in all Volumes, may well deſerve the precedencie;) Yet have they come ſhort of the uſe of perfect Concordances.

ces, which is to point out, not principall points only, but euery particular point in holy Scripture. By a perfect Concordance, if thou remembrest but one word of a sentence which thou desirest to know, thou maist bee directed to finde out the whole sentence, and the place where it is, that so not by the bare words, but by the dependance of them, thou maist finde out the true sense. By a perfect Concordance thou maist know what words and phrases are rarely, what frequently used, yea how oft any word is used, a point wherein the Iewes were very skilfull. By a perfect Concordance thou maist soone finde out proofes for every principle of Christian Religion, and so have thy faith the more firmely setled thereon. By a perfect Concordance thou maist soone discerne what points the holy Ghost most urgeth and inculcateth: and thereupon what are most diligently to be observed, and most carefully to be heeded by thee. By a perfect Concordance some supply may be made of mens too much negligence in reading the Scripture, and of their ignorance following thereon. Many other Commodities of good Concordances might be added to these, wherein they much excell all Indexes, Tables, Common places, Epitomes, Abbreviaries, and such other meaner helpes for finding out the golden Mines of the Scripture. Hereby iudge what a Treasure our English Church hath wanted a long while, and what at length it hath gained by the indefatigable industry of the Composer of this Concordance, wherein all the words and phrases of the Bible are so fully and distinctly set downe, as in regard of our English tongue it well deserveth the fore-mentioned style of Henry Stephens last Latine Concordance. This Concordance is composed according to the last and best Translation of the English Bible, which is now most in use; and in that respect also this Concordance must needes bee of better use than any that euer was before it. If any shall obiect and say, that there can bee no great needs of an English Concordance, because Concordances are for Diuines, and they have helps enough from the fore-mentioned Concordances in Hebrew, Greeke, and Latine: I answer, That all of all sorts, Diuines and others, may make very good use of a Concordance in their mother tongue. For first, I doubt whether all that carry the name, and are in the place of Diuines (O the miserie of this learned age, wherein there is such abundance of able Diuines!) can well use Concordances in the learned languages. To such, a Concordance in English may be vsefull: As for others, I suppose that such Diuines as are well exercised in the Originall Tongues, may notwithstanding bee best acquainted with their mother tongue, and that the phrases thereof are most familiar to them. As for the Latine, there are many Translations therein, which much differ in words and phrases, so as in searching Latine Concordances, they may oft misse what they seeke. But this English Concordance, being taken out of the last Translation, which is now most, if not altogether in use, they may soone find herein what they seeke; in which respect the best learned may make good vse, even of this English Concordance. As for Lay men, even such as are ignorant of the learned Languages, their faith is, or ought to be grounded on the holy Scriptures, and Rules for their life fetched from thence. When they therefore remember a word or phrase of a comfortable Promise, or of an vsefull Direction, or of a needefull History, or when they heare such Points briefly quoted by Preachers or others, and would gladly know where to finde it, that they may againe and againe reade it, and further meditate thereon, a Concordance in the mother Tongue (and none but such an one) is of excellent use to them. Thus this Concordance being vsefull to all, let it be vsed by all. And God giue a blessing to the right vse thereof.

Thine,
